GEORGE WILKINS KENDALL

BY LEON OLIVER.

I propose to give the readers of Our Fire-ide Friend an occasional sketch of people whom I have met; and, as the minal, will speak of the late George Wikins Kenduli, the well known journal-ist and author, and one of the first to in-augurate systematic sheep husbandry in Thaty years ago, when a boy in Vermont, I was intensely interested in reading the Santa Fe Expedition, a work of thisling interest, descriptive of an expedition train San Antonio de Baxer, Tex, to the acce-int city of Santa Fe, in what is now called New Mexico; which expedition was captured by the Mexicans, and by them subjected to the most cruel hardstrips and indignities.

and by them supercived to the most cruel hardsuips and indigotities. Probably no man entered into the Mexican war (a few years later) with a keener resist than Mr. Kenddi, or enjoyed with heariter zeat the punishment and humiliation of the croel and vandic live Mexicans, feeling, no doubt, that h-was thereby receiving compensation for the sufferings inflicted upon himself and comrades in the ill-starred expediworld through his connection with the N. w Oriesus Picayone, of which he was for many years one of the editors and proprietors. As a journalist, he certains had no superior in the South; and his sar correspondence, during the Mexican war, was the most graphic and thrilling of any published in the country. After the close of the war he went to Paris, where he married and remained several years; while there, he wrote and published the history of the Mexican war. It was an elaborate history, splendidly instrated by French artists; but it was not a financial success, being too expensive for general circulation. But for his very the Biotypus which was interest in the Picayune, which was a prosperous and remunerative journal, his book would have swamped him financialbook would have swamped him financially. Soon after his return from Paris, cloout 1856.) he settled in T-xas as a sneep-raiser and wool-grower, having some years previously located a rando of several thousand acres, and the wool-growers of Texas to-day are more indebted to him than to any or all other men for the development of this important branch of husbandry in that fine grazing region. He demonstrated that wool-growing in Texas could be made yearly more profitable than the culture of the cotton or sugar.

In April, 1860, I was at San Antonio, T-xas, (which, by the way, is one of the oldest and quaintest towns on the continent), and one afternoon, in company with a relative, at that time a resident of San Antonio, I started to make a visit to Mr. Kendall, who was living near New Mr. Kendail, who was living near New Braunfel, a German colony some thirty miles from San Antonio. We arrived at the village in the evening, and put up at a hotel for the night. In the morning we drove out four miles to Mr. Kendall's residence. The house was a neat stone cottage with verandas on three sides and situated on a kind of a knoll. As we drove up I noticed a sturdy man of medium height standing on the lawn smoking a cob pipe; his dress was very simple, being only linen pants, a hickory shirt, and a broad-brimined straw hat It never occurred to me that this could be the brilliant writer and editor; but, as be the brilliant writer and editor; but, as we haited and he recognized my compan-ion, his gentlemanly, yet hearty, greeting told me that he was none other than Mr. followed, and a most cordial welcome was extended to me, which rendered the presentation of myletters of introduction almost superfluous, and we were made self. An introduction soon at once to feet "at home" and at case, which is the essence of true hospitality.

After being presented to his accomplished wife and family, we repaired to the library, and I. for one, was quite content to be a listner. There are some very entertaining writers, who are poor talkers, but Mr. Kendall was not one of at class. It I had been charmed with that class. If I had been charmed with his writings, I was doubly so with his conversation. I have met many entertaining conversationalists, but never one more charmingly entertaining than he. His life had been one of great adventure, and being a close observer, with tract descriptive powers, it was a tich tract to sit and listen to him. He had all the off-hand freedom of the frontiers man combined with the polish of the man, combined with the polish of the true gentleman, who had mangled in the most refined society, both at home and come from the East (Rochester than was in the West) expecting to get work on the Messenger, a paper published at Can-andaigus, but was disappointed; so he tramped to Rochester, and applied to the late Luther Tucker, at that time pubcalifornia street, San Francisco Cal.

Laction of the Country Gentleman, but there was no work to be had. What to do be hardly knew—be was out of money, and a stranger. Strolling along the street, he was attracted by an auction sale, and went into the store, and stood with the crowd listening to the auctioneer. Presently he was accosted by a large, farmer-like man, who said: "Young man, do you want a job?" Of course he did, he must do aomething, so he "hired out, for eight dollars a month, and went home with his employer, and worked four months, part of the time on a farm, and part of the time in a saw mill, until he was taken down with the sque, and had to quit. I had the pleasure on my return north of being the bearer of a kindly measage to his old employer, who was still living—Judge Sibley, of Ruah—with whom I was well acquainted. On leaving Rash he tramped to Buffalo, and not finding a "sit" there, he took pussage in a schooner for Cleveland, but was wrecked near Sandusky, and barely escaped with his life; he found himself on land, with the clothes he had on his back, and fifty cents the sum total of his available means, and so he tramped on, walking the entire distance to Cincinnati, where he found work at his trade, and, and he employed were been out said and many the delinquent, and well be delinquent, and well acquainted. About noon two more guests arrived, gentlemen from Boston. Mr. K. soon begget to be excused for a short time, and when he reappeared was arrayed in a nice dress-suit, in which he seemed quite as much at ease as he did in his lines pants and hickory shirt.

Dinner was soon announced, and here on a ranch a mile from any neighbors, and thirty miles from anything like society, was served a most elegant dinner, with all the forms and observances which mark such occassions in the most wealthy and reflued homes in our cities. The afternoon was passed most delightenily, and we were pressed by our heat to spend some days with him, but we decided to return to San Antonio in the evening. Before we started, Mr. K. took a half sheet of paper, and said. "I will show you a short cut by when you can save about six miles." So he drew with a pencil a diagram of his short route, so clear and well defined with its landmarks, that we were able to follow it by the moon-light. I have preserved it as a memento of one of the most delightful days I ever speut.

Bidding our host and his charming family forewell, we drove away, and about midnight arrived at the Menger Hotel on the Alamo Plaza.
